PEACE IN AUSTRALIA THE UNTOLD STORY

The centenary of World War I commemorates the sacrifice demanded of servicemen in what was described as the War to end all wars. That this led to the outbreak of a second world war little more than twenty years later proved the futility of seeking violence as a means to end conflict. This together with the now quite popular notion that the Australian national character was forged in the trenches of Gallipoli led several organisations and individual people to form a coalition which has its focus on broadening our opportunities to learn from our shared history. We seek to tell the untold, forgotten and sometimes hidden stories—those which give breadth to our shared history and relate the efforts of Australians to create peaceful alternatives.

We have arranged four public forums in which we will explore ideas which expand on those in the many commemoration programs which will recount the historical events. We will honour those who served and pay our respect through our efforts to also remember peacemakers across the various historical period to gain inspiration to live more peacefully in the present and future
